Mr. Matthew Steele

Dear Mr. Steele,

When I think of being a sports medicine physician for the NFL, the first word that comes to mind is commitment. Although fans experience a six month offseason from watching games, NFL team physicians are working hard behind the scenes to ensure that athletes are in their best physical health.

I have been a football fan since birth, and I keep up with all NFL news, teams, and players. Although being a sports medicine physician for the NFL is time consuming, the busy life will be worth it when I get to stand on the sideline and watch the games.

I wanted to be a neurosurgeon for many years, but I realized that living a fulfilled life with a job I enjoy is more important than having a profession that makes more money. An NFL team doctor is the perfect job for me because I am passionate about sports and I have always wanted to help people. If someone gets injured, I want to get them back on the field as soon as possible so that they can get back to playing the game they love.

I am also personable, so I would not only take care of the athletes, but I would take the time to get to know the players underneath the helmets. Building relationships with the players sounds like a rewarding experience, and it will make me a better physician along the way.

I would be grateful for the opportunity to have an interview at your convenience. I have attached my resume for further examination. Please contact me with any inquiries at (209) 481-3483 or email me at 62808494@riponusd.net. I appreciate your consideration and look forward to hearing from you.

Thank you for your time,

Ava Brocchini
